

Guide to open access pub- lishing

At no cost to the reader or author

In this guide, you'll find a wide selection of diamond journals, which offer various options for publishing your results in an Open Access environment, at no cost to the reader or the author.

Open publishing practices are crucial in a context where free access to research results is essential for knowledge sharing and innovation.

The traditional publishing model restricts reader access, while Open Access gold and hybrid allow free access to research, but charge authors. While these models improve accessibility, they ultimately shift the publication cost to researchers, creating further constraints.

New, fairer options are emerging, like the diamond publishing model. This lets authors and readers publish and access research for free. Funded by academic institutions, the diamond pathway is a sustainable way to share knowledge.

The different models of publication of scientific articles

OPEN ACCESS MODEL	ARTICLE PROCESS CHARGES (APC)	ARCHIVING POLICY
Diamond: Open-access journals published by academic institutions.	No fees charged to authors, readers, or institutions.	Articles are immediately available on the publisher's website and institutional repository.
Gold: Open-access journals published by commercial publishers.	Authors pay publication fees to ensure the accessibility of their articles upon release.	Articles are immediately available on the publisher's website and institutional repository.
Green: Subscription-based journals, where access to articles is restricted to subscribing institutions.	Institutions do not pay additional publication fees.	Only the post-print (not the final PDF) can be archived in the institutional repository after an embargo (12–24-months).
Hybrid: Subscription-based journals that offer immediate access to selected articles upon payment of a publication fee.	The publisher continues to charge subscription fees to the institution while collecting APC from authors for OA publication.	Articles are immediately available on the publisher's website and institutional repository.
